THURSDAY EVENING, August 8, 1866.

The Gold market to day was steady and rm, the price closing at 148%. The New York press continue to assert the existence of a clique or cliques to advance the premium, but as there is no demand for export, these operators find themselves unable to do more than sustain the premium by making coin scarce for delivery. The New York Times remarks upon this head:—"There is retained to a comparation of the continue fork press continue to assert the existence a large Bull interest in the Gold Room, concentratrated in three or four hands, but no general encouragement to support it in the appetite, and restorss your cheerfulness.
